HOW LINCOLN MADE A MATCH.

From the Youth's Companion.

It was about a year before the fall of Richmond, when both North and South seemed tottering to ruin, that a young lady, who had known Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln for years, visited Washington. She was an exceptionally sensible, warm-hearted, refined woman, gifted with a marvellous voice and a graceful figure, but she was very homely. She called at the White House, and when she had gone with his wife into a private room, Mr. Lincoln expressed his surprise to a friend that "some good man had not been lucky enough to marry her."

Adding: "L—, herself, would be much happier if she were a wife and mother."

A few months later Major C—, a volunteer officer, thoroughly respected by the President, and a bachelor, came into the study. Mr. Lincoln looked at him thoughtfully.

"What are you going to do when the war is over, C—?" he asked suddenly.

"Seek my fortune, I suppose," was the startled reply.

"There it is in that room." A frank, girlish laugh was heard at the moment. "No, you can't go to see it now; business first. But there it is."

That evening there was a reception at the White House. The President beckoned to Major C—.

"Listen," he said.

A lady, whom they could not see because of the crowd, was singing, in a voice of great beauty and sweetness, some gay song. The Major would have moved forward, but Mr. Lincoln detained him, his eyes twinkling with shrewd fun.

"Wait a bit," he said. "Don't look at her face yet."

Presently she sang a ballad with such pathos that the Major's eyes grew dim.

"Now go. She's as good and true as her song."

The good word of Mr. Lincoln probably influenced both parties. In a few months they were married, and the union has proved a most happy one.

"I did one wise thing in 1864," Mr. Lincoln said, rubbing his chin, as was his wont when pleased; "I made that match."

A NEW LEACHING PROCESS.

From the London Mining Journal.

The invention of Messrs. Drouin & DeBaxeres de Tarres, of Madrid, has for its object the more economical recovery of silver and copper from all minerals or ores containing the same, and consists in reducing such ores to powder, and in the addition to such pulverized mineral or ore of an acidulated solution, either hot or cold, of marine salt, in order to obtain the chlorides of such metals. Also in the use of binoxide of manganese, with the object of facilitating the dissolution of the chloride of silver.

The quantities of materials composing the solution will vary with the quantity and richness of the ores treated. As an example, to five pounds of pulverized ore containing, say, two ounces of marine salt to ten drops of nitric acid in four gallons of water, and for facilitating the dissolution of the chloride of silver 1-10 of an ounce of the binoxide of manganese. The whole process will occupy twelve to twenty-four hours, and can be performed by crushing the ore in any convenient stamping machine, and then treating the ores as above described in a cask or casks with double sides and bottom covered with cloth, which serves as a filter. The pulverized ore is placed in the inner and upper part of the cask, where it is held in suspension in the solution, and stirred therein by hand or machinery. It is sometimes convenient to add water to the solution, especially if the metal is mixed with tenacious earth or matters, also to vary the proportions given above.

RUSSIAN RED TAPEIRIN.

From Dr. Burck's Life of Bismarck.

Another feature of the Russian service was illustrated by the Prince in the following pretty little anecdote: "One day I was walking with the Emperor of Russia in the Summer Garden of St. Petersburg, when, coming upon a sentinel in the center of a lawn, I took the liberty of inquiring why the man was placed there. The Emperor did not know. The Adjutant did not know. The sentinel did not know, except that he had been ordered there. The adjutant was then dispatched to ask the officer of the watch, whose reply tallied with the sentinel's. "Ordered." Curiosity awakened, military records were searched, without yielding any satisfactory solution. At last an old servant man was routed out, who remembered hearing his father relate that the Empress Catharine II., one hundred years ago, had found a snow-drop on that particular spot, and given orders to protect it from being plucked. No other device could be thought of than by guarding it by a sentinel. The order once issued was left in force for a century."

Postal cards give rise to peculiar troubles. A Rochester lumber dealer mailed a card to a discharged clerk, accusing him of swindling; and the clerk has obtained a verdict of four hundred and fifty dollars damages based on the publicity of the charge while passing through the mails. A similar case is on trial in Pittsburgh, the plaintiff being a sewing machine agent, to whom his employer addressed an accusation of improperly retaining money. An Omaha clergyman publishes a card complaining that he frequently receives advertisements of wines printed on postal cards; and as he is a total abstainer from strong drink, the impression might be wrongfully created that he is a buyer of the wine. A Boston landlady sends bills on postal cards to former boarders, accompanied by urgent requests for payment. One of the recipients began a suit against her for libel, but withdrew it—his lawyer advising him that, as the communication was a simple request to pay a just debt, he had no legal grievance. A Kansas City girl jilted her lover, and he retaliated by writing her anonymous letters on postal cards. She did not invoke the law, but put a rawhide in her pocket, laid in wait for her annoyances, and whipped him.

The world is crazy for show. There is not one, perhaps, in a thousand, who dares fall back on his real, simple self for power to get through the world, and to extract enjoyment as he goes along. There is no end to the aping, the mimicry, the false airs, and the superficial manners. It requires rare courage, we admit, to live up to one's enlightened convictions in these days. Unless you consent to join in the general cheat, there is no room for you among the great mob of pretenders. If a man desires to live within his means, and is resolute in his purpose not to appear more than he really is, let him be applauded. There is something fresh and invigorating in such an example, and we should honor and uphold such a plan with all the energy in our power.

The Dolan and Ellis parties in Lincoln county, N. M., are about to pool their issues, and be law-abiding.
